INTERIOR VIEW OF THE PANCLIBANON, BAKER-STREET.

We gave in No. 11 an engraving of the interior of the Polytechnic Institution, and follow up this part of our plan by presenting another of the Panclibanon; in like manner, that the sciences are brought under notice; and reconciled to popular understanding by the former, the arts relating to domestic convenience, exemplified in a thousand specimens of manufacturing skill, are exhibited in the latter; at this point comparison ceases. Our subject, the Panclibanon, is one of those great commercial establishments which the comprehensive, and, at the same time, refined notions of later days has originated in the metropolis. Endless variety and luxurious display of all that can be sought for in the several departments embraced by the term "furnishing ironmongery" is the leading feature, and carried out in a way to gratify the most fastidious taste; the Panclibanon is therefore a mart peculiarly fitted to meet the requirements of the higher ranks of society. To invite their attention by an enumeration of the many tasteful objects which here meet the eye, would require a pamphlet, and their ever varying aspect a succession of similar publications, for the inventive talent of both artist and artisan are liberally encouraged by the addition, to this already vast collection, of every forthcoming novelty, elegant or useful, having claim to notice.

And now a word or two on economy; our class, the builders, will do well to visit this establishment; in the first place, the choice of stoves suited to every kind of house and apartment, is unusually extensive, and there is in many of the examples submitted, both splendour and a felicitous harmonising with the styles of building and decorating most
